Child Loses Finger In Wringer

LAC LA BICHE — Larry Couture, age two years, somehow managed to get his hand in the wringer, while the housekeeper was hanging out clothes on Tuesday, May 22.

No one seems to know how the little fellow managed to reach far enough to get his hand in the wringer, but on hearing the screams, the housekeeper ran to the houuse to find the child's right arm in the wringer and the flesh completely torn off the second finger of the right hand.

Dr. Brimsmead was called immediately and the child was rushed to the hospital, but the finger had to be amputated at once.

The little boy's mother was ill in bed at the time of the accident.

Officers, Cadets Visit McGrane Camp

The annual inspection of the Lac la Biche corps did not end the activities at Camp McGrane. With just one day interval in between, 25 cadets and their officers from Smoky Lake arrived for a week end visit to the camp.

The Smoky Lake corps, R.C.S.C. Algonquin, is a new corps, being formed last October and this was the first trip that they had made to another corps. The commanding officer, Lieut. J. Dobush, R.C.S.C. was with the corps, accompanied by S/Lieut. C. Ewasiuk and Const. J. Pennett, RCMP who is an instructor with the corps. Const. Pennett was stationed in Lac la Biche a few years ago.

The weather was very fine for the visitors and they also made use of the cutter, which was left at their disposal. Also the Exeter training vessel of the local cadets visited the camp and all the members of the Smoky Lake corps had a crush on it.

The cadets left for home at 4:00 p.m. Sunday afternoon after spending 24 hours at the camp.

The Herald Won't Quit Publication

By A. B. SVARICH

ATMORE. — Ratepayers of the municipal district of Athabasca are dismayed at the news that the municipal council is cancelling the subscription contract with the Lac La Biche Herald.

Some even think that this means the Herald will be discontinued altogether, but that is not the case. No valid reason of any kind has been advanced by municipal authorities for forcing district residents to take the Athabasca Echo. For over five years they have enoyed reading the Lac La Biche Herald every week, and in some way or other, we intend that they can continue getting the Herald if they wish.

The Athabasca Echo, which is definitely not published by the publishers of the Lac La Biche Herald, will not carry many of the favorite features our readers have come to appreciate.

Residents of this district, who feel they should have the right to continue taking the Herald instead of the other paper, should notify their councillor for the division.

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT SAYS TENDERS TO BE CALLED SOON

By T. W. PUE

J. M. Dechene, veteran Liberal member of the House of Commons for Athabasca Constituency, has released latest word on the proposed new Federal Building. Mr. Dechene has advised the Lac La Biche Herald that the project has been approved and tenders are being called soon for contractors to make bids.

Mr. Dechene's letter did not give any details on the size or location in town of the new building. It is presumed that it will be large enough to accommodate several other offices along with the post office.

No date has been set for the work to start, although it is likely it will get under way this summer or fall.

This is another in a series of recent new buildings in Lac La Biche. The new York Hotel, Provincial Building and addition to the St. Catharine's Hospital have all been important additions to the growing and progressive town of Lac La Biche.

Lac la Biche

Dr. L. P. Mouseau and Dr. C. Lefebvre spent the weekend in the Lac la Biche area on a fishing trip.

Dr. Damase Bouvier was a business visitor to the town.

DISTRICT AGRICULTURIST NOTES

By J. S. LORE

Results of tests on Illustration Stations of the Canada department of agriculture in the Swift Current district over the past seven years continue to show the value in terms of dollars and cents of the advantages of working summerfallow early and well. There are many kinds of summerfallow practices carried on in southwestern Saskatchewan. Yields of grain on these have varied from field to field, and many farmers wonder why their field did not yield as much as the neighbor's across the road. The answer might be found in the summerfallow practices conducted the previous year.

On the Illustration stations in southwestern Saskatchewan, an experiment comparing good and poor summerfall practices on adjacent two-acre plots has been conducted for the past seven years. Records were kept of field operations, weed growth, and the cost of the field work. The latter includes machinery costs, gas, oil, grease, and labor. For the good fallow, the first operation was conducted as soon as possible after seeding. For the poor fallow, the first operation was delayed until the last week in June. After the first operation both fallows were worked as often as required for good weed control.

The results of these experiments show that the advantages of the good fallow practices were as follows:

(1) Better moisture conservation.

(2) Less weed growth and practically no visible weed seed produced.

(3) Less weed growth in the following crop.

(4) The land was worked before it was dried out and subject to wind erosion.

(5) A higher yielding crop was produced. On the average, one more field operation was performed on the good fallow at a cost of 70c per acre. However, this extra work resulted in an increased yield of 3.2 bushels per acre. This is a net return on investment of over 500 per cent.

These experiments were made during years of favorable moisture conditions but a good job of summerfallowing still paid dividends.

Your Best Buy

In these days of high prices and low bank balances we don't want to spend any more money than we have to for the necessary things in life. To save money we must know how to buy intelligently and practice good buymanship prinicples — getting good value for our money.

A friend of mine is perpetually in a state of being "broke". Her main trouble is that she doesn't know money values. She doesn't plan before shopping or buying according to her needs. "He who buys what he doesn't need steals from himself".

She buys in dabs when she could save a good deal by quantity buying. Especially in nylons, buy three or four pair at a time of the same color.

She doesn't consider the purpose of the article, always buys top quality. Often things of low or medium quality would be more suitable as in the case of buying peaches for peach cobbler. Here you don't need perfectly formed pieces and a fancy grade would be a waste. Of course poor or medium grade is not the best buy in every case. For example poor quality shoes will not give good service and may cause foot injury. Don't get carried away with the idea that price and quality always go hand in hand. So many people think that because the price is high the article is good.

My friend doesn't read labels—half the time she never knows what it is she's getting. Do you? The more you know about the article you are going to buy the better judge of quality you'll be; and the better the judge the better the chance you have of getting "your best buy".

For further information about this subject write for a free copy of the booklet "Better Buymanship", Household Finance Corp. of Canada, 80 Richmond St. West, Toronto, Ontario. Enclose stamps to cover mailing.

Judy 'Satisfactory' After Operation

ROCHESTER, Minn. — Surgeons of the Mayo Clinic have operated on the defective heart of a little Canadian girl, Judy Maddison, and the child was described by her mother as in "very satisfactory condition."

"I'm sure that God's hand must have guided the surgeons' hands," said Mrs. William Maddison of Turner Valley.

The mother added that no transfusions were necessary Wednesday during surgery on the five-year-old girl. She said Judy was expected to be in hospital another five to seven days.

Mrs. Maddison would not say whether she and her husband had changed their mind, and agreed to permit transfusions, had they been necessary.

The Maddisons earlier said they would refuse to allow the operation unless surgeons promised not to use blood if a transfusion were required. The parents belong to the Jehovah's Witnesses sect and say giving of blood is contrary to the Bible's teachings.

Radar Lines Causing Grave Labor Shortage

EDMONTON — City building contractors say the DEW Radar Line is one factor causing a shortage of skilled and unskilled labor needed to carry out a $30,000,000 building program here this year.

Contractors said both the DEW Line and the MID Continental Radar Line are drawing away large numbers of local men with higher wages. Others have been attracted by district projects such as the $35,000,000 sulphate pulp mill being built at Hinton, 180 miles west of here.

M. H. Troskey, president of the Edmonton Builders' Exchange, said a shortage of help, especially carpenters, painters, and bricklayers, was felt two weeks ago.

Another contractor said there is a shortage of labor but the condition is not acute. He said that rates for carpenters and laborers are reported to be about 25 cents an hour higher on the radar lines than here.

Health Unit Notes

By PEGGY GRAHAM, Ph.N.

1. GROWING UP

The teen years are exciting and challenging years for the youngsters and for their parents, too. This is a period when boys and girls are beginning to put away childish things and to concentrate more and more on the business of becoming grownups.

During these years it is only natural to expect a certain amount of confusion and a good deal of change and adjustment.

One day your teen-ager may seem almost adult, and the next day, he may behave like a seven-year-old. Some of this wavering is an expression of a very real attempt to test out the unknown, followed by a turning to the old, familiar patterns of earlier childhood.

It's all part of growing up — part of the adolescent's very natural desire for adult freedom combined with his still existing need for a measure of the reassurance and protection he required when younger.

Teen-agers aren't the only ones who waver during this period. Parents often shift their attitudes, too. Sometimes they say, "You're old enough now to help out with this," and in the next breath, "You can't do that yet — you're much too young.' 'No wonder the teen years sometimes seem confusing and confused!

The whole business of growing up is a complicated one that brings with it new problems for the adolescent as well as for his parents, but these 'teen years don't necessarily have to be ones of great emotional upheaval. They're difficult, but they're never dull.

In homes where parents and children enjoy things together and love and respect each other, every period of growth leads to the next one successfully, though not necessarily uneventfully.

2. DEVELOPING INDDEPENDENCE

Joan and Betty often air their woes on the way home from school. "When do you think they'll ever begin to understand that we're not babies any longer? Honestly, neither your parents nor mine seem to realize that we're practically grown-up, after all, we're 15!"

Many teen-agers complain — to each other at least — that their parents often treat them as though they were much younger than they really are.

When young people complain of being treated "like kids," what they are saying is that they want to feel and act like individuals. They want to be treated with respect. They want to select their own clothes, make their own plans, choose their own friends.

They're bound to make mistakes now and then, but these mistakes are necessary if they are to learn to take care of themselves and to become responsible members of society.

Your teen-ager can become an adult only by being allowed to try. He needs your encouragement in his efforts at growing to adulthood, and that includes being given many opportunities to learn independence and the responsibility that goes with freedom.

He needs more (not fewer) decisions that are his own to make; more chances to test himself out, more discussions of what can and cannot be done and why; fewer absolute prohibitions, and some firm "no's" when the need for them is clear cut and necessary.

Some parents refuse to allow their teen-agers any sort of independence. Often it is because they want to protect them from harm or because they feel that their youngsters are not yet ready for independence. But teen-agers don't want complete independence. They probably wouldn't know what to do with it if they had it.

They don't want to be given absolute freedom to do what whatever they please. They want and need limits. They want also to be respected as young people with some life of their own, a life somewhat apart from that of their parents. They want to be treated like young adults, not "like kids," and at the same time they need to hold on to the security that comes from knowing that their parents love them and really do want to help as much as they can.

You will probably wonder why your teen-ager often rebels if he really wants some limits set. The reason is not unlike that behind his behavior when he was a young child.

You've often seen three-year-olds making a great fuss about coming into the house, when called. But have you noticed that they often seem relieved when they are finally picked up and carried in? Teen-ager or three-year-old, all children can afford to protest when they can count on understanding parents to see that certain reasonable standards are upheld.

Rebellion may be a necessary step toward eventual independence. How you set your limits has, of course, a great deal to do with how your teen-ager will accept them. When you talk to a teen-ager as a person, rather than as a child to be ordered about, you stand a good chance of getting his wholehearted co-operation.

Your teen-ager is more likely to ask for and accept your friendly guidance when he knows that you are backing him up in his desire for eventual independence.

Watching your teen-ager's struggles to become independent can sometimes be painful, but it helps if you can realize that he can't be expected to behave maturely all the time. It helps if you remember that he does need reasonable limits.

It helps if you can state your reasons and talk them over together, and even change your requirements if your teen-ager puts up a good cause. It helps, too, to stand by your decisions on the really big issues when you feel you have to.

Thunder Storms Bring Welcome Rain Showers

EDMONTON, June 3 (BUP). — Several thunderstorms Sunday night brought some relief to the more than 1,200 Canadian soldiers and fire-fighters who are struggling to suppress the fires burning out of control along the fothills of the Rockies.

T. R. Hammer, Chief Superintendent of Forest Protection, said here today that the general fire situation picture was improving and that his hard-pressed crews were gaining ground on all fronts. More men and equipment have been moved into the areas where the fires are raging at will through small stands of timber and across bush and swamp.

In the Edson region, some 130 miles west of Edmonton, troops from Western Command went into action during the night under their own officers to assist weary fire-fighters who have been in the bush since May 10th. The 200 odd troops will use forest department equipment and have rangers as liaison officers. Captain Johnson, Western Command PRO, said he was making a tour of the fire area near Edson today, and was going to make a report later in the day.

Meanwhile Hammer said the large fire that got out of control near Faust three days ago was being suppressed, and good progress was also being made with control measures at Whitecourt and Valleyview.

During last month 155 fires broke out in Alberta, of which 84 are still burning. The blazes have claimed 640,000 acres of bush, grassland and wood, while the death toll among wild animals was feared to have been high.

School Health Program

By PEGGY GRAHAM

During the past three months I have been visiting the schools carrying out routine annual inspection of pupils. The pupils have a physical examination and vision test.

Many pupils were tuberculin patch tested. A positive result to this test does not mean that the child has tuberculosis but only that he or she has been exposed to tuberculosis at some time. Any pupil who gave a positive result had a chest x-ray, free of charge. Family contacts of positive reactors were also patch tested and had a chest x-ray, if the result was positive.

Whenever children are found to have defects, the parents are notified by letter and are advised to take the child to the family doctor, dentist or optician, whichever is appropriate. There is too high a proportion of parents, who make no effort to have these defects remedied. There are many cases, difficulties such as long distances to travel and delay in getting appointments, but if a real effort is made these can be overcome.

In order to get the most from school, a child must be in the best possible state of health. It is not possible for children to do their best when they have a mouthful of defective teeth, enlarged tonsils, and adenoids causing catarrhal deafness or defective vision.

The two types of defects most commonly found are defective teeth and vision. Only too often are children found in school with a vision of 20-60 or 20-80 and are not wearing glasses. Anything written on the blackboard must appear as an indistinct blur to these children. Much of the general ill-health found in childhood and in teenagers can be attributed to carious teeth.

Owl River

Rain which fell here in the last part of May put a temporary stop to seeding in this vicinity.

One large bear is quite interested in tractors. He has been seen standing on his hind feet at the edge of a fairly large field watching the tractors, intently, as they moved around the field.

Sports Day in Lac la Biche was a much looked forward to event to the children of this community, most of whom attended. The teachers of Owl River Schools No. 1 and No. 2 had their pupils well trained. It is reported that Margaret Michalcheon won a blue ribbon in one of the contests.

Otto Kampke, owner and manager of the local store, has purchased a new acetylene welding unit.

Mrs. George Cardinal and family visited relatives in Owl River.
